

Saturday, June 27 — Mürren (second full free day)

Big picture: pair with yesterday. If Friday was clear and you did Schilthorn, make today a valley day; if weather flipped, do Schilthorn now.

Option A — Lauterbrunnen Valley day

1. Take the cable car down to Stechelberg, then the bus to Lauterbrunnen (the same corridor you arrived on — this is the route to use, since the Grütschalp line is closed for your dates; see note).
2. On the valley floor, see Staubbach Falls (one of Europe's highest free-falling waterfalls) tumbling off the cliff above the village, and stroll the valley with its many ribbon waterfalls.
3. Take the post bus toward Stechelberg to Trümmelbach Falls — ten glacial waterfalls inside the mountain, reached by an elevator bored into the rock. Allow 60–90 min; there are walkways and some stairs at the top, but the elevator handles the climb.
4. Return up to Mürren by bus + cable car in the late afternoon.

HEADS UP · Grütschalp route is closed during your trip

The scenic Lauterbrunnen–Grütschalp–Mürren cable car + cliff railway is closed Apr 13 – Jul 10, 2026. So both your valley descent and return must use the Stechelberg side (cable car + bus). It still works beautifully — it's just the one routing, not a loop.

Option B — the mountain you skipped + a gentle walk

If Friday's weather pushed Schilthorn to today, go up early — mornings are clearest at altitude. With energy to spare, add the Blumental Panorama Trail: a mostly flat ~1¼-hr walk from near Mürren station through cow meadows up toward Allmendhubel, the Eiger–Mönch–Jungfrau in front of you the whole way, benches throughout. Take the funicular back down.

The ideal pairing

Schilthorn on whichever of the two days is clearest; the valley (Lauterbrunnen + Trümmelbach) on the other. That gives you one big-mountain day and one gentle scenic-recovery day before the travel day to Basel.
